

How to Integrate STTP into your Community

In your school:

- Teach STTP
 - Adapt a lesson for a local defender and submit it to STTP
 - Map a lesson into your current curriculum (one time use in a day or over time)
 - Utilize one or more lessons as part of an advisory or extracurricular activity (where you can pick one or multiple lessons and activities)
 - STTP mini-mester (use many lessons to cover a human rights theme or region)
- Introduce STTP to administrators, department, students
- Train other teachers
- Work with your students Become a Defender
 - Organize a STTP Human Rights Day
 - Incorporate STTP into year-round student programming
 - Invite a STTP defender to speak at your school
- Work with your students on the video contest
- Assess the human rights climate of your school (using the Human Rights Temperature and other tools). Create an action plan to change human rights abuses.
- Highlight STTP Defenders around the school and highlight members of the school community who are your local Human Rights defenders

In your district:

- Present STTP at a district wide meeting - either a general meeting or specific to a subject, safe schools, student programming
- Present STTP at an area conference - either subject focused, through the union
- Meet with a district curriculum coordinator

In your state/province:

- Present STTP at a state/province wide meeting - either a general meeting or specific to a subject, safe schools, student programming
- Present STTP at a state/province wide conference - either subject focused, through the union
- Meet with your state/province education leadership

Nationally:

- Present STTP at a national meeting - either a general meeting or specific to a subject, safe schools, student programming
- Present STTP at a national conference - either subject focused, through the union

Internationally:

- Present STTP at an international conference
- Join other international organizations for a day of action